The Director of the Human Rights Media Center based in South Africa, Shirley Gunn has stressed the need for Liberians to capture their pasts through arts.

Madam Gunn said it would not cost millions of dollars for Liberians to depict their immediate past.

Madam Gunn made the statement Monday evening when she launched Breaking the Silence: A Luta Contina, an exhibition of memory and healing created by Apartheid survivors from South Africa.

The ceremony which was held at the University of Liberia was followed by a panel discussion. The exhibition is opened for public viewing until Friday.

Madam Gunn disclosed that her organization would facilitate a two-day memorial workshop for 30 participants to create a reflective painting or drawing and would on Wednesday hold a workshop for 20 participants to share their life stories through body mapping.
